Beulah Land stories

First developed for use in her own ministries by Christian Educator Gretchen Wolff Pritchard, Beulah Land is a felt board teaching resource that offers the stories of the Christian faith to children in a richly imaginative manner, enabling children to develop a visual vocabulary of faith.

Why feltboard storytelling?

The storytelling technique is old... so old that it is new. It has been called felt storytelling, flannel board, fuzzy felt, felt board and probably several other names.

Experts say that we retain 25% of what we hear, 45% of what we see and 65% of what we hear and see. As a teaching technique the Beulah Land felt story telling fosters learning through the eyes and the ears (of both the mind and heart!).

What are the symbolic images?

The felt story telling images are rich with the symbolism of our faith. The persons of the Trinity are represented by two hands and a red heart, the figure of Jesus and the white dove. There is a rainbow, a tomb and a burst of light; sun and stars, hills and water, laying the groundwork for building rich and suggestive landscapes.

The Old Testament people are small, reflecting an appreciation of the role of landscape in the Old Testament (desert, city, Holy Mountain), as well as the distance from present day. The larger size of the New Testament and Modern Day people reflects their nearness to us and the more personal relationship that we have with Jesus.
